Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 102

4. The following is a quotation of the appropriate paragraphs of 35 U.S.C. 102 that form the basis for the rejections under this section made in this Office action:

A person shall be entitled to a patent unless --

(b) the invention was patented or described in a printed publication in this or a foreign country or in public use or on sale in this country, more than one year prior to the date of application for patent in the United States.

5. Claims 17-19 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 102(b) as being clearly anticipated by Kitagawa et al. (US 5,819,126).

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

6. The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

7. Claims 1-6 and 8-16 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over the admitted prior art described in the specification, in view of Kitagawa et al. (US 5,819,126).

The admitted prior art, as described by applicant, clearly anticipates all of the substantive elements of the instant invention with regard to a method of sales of customized products, except for disclosing that the particular customized product being offered for sale and selected/created by the customer in the manner of computer systems at dell.com is a camera system being sold for one time use (i.e. "leased"). The admitted prior art further allows that "sales" of such one-time-use (i.e. "leased") cameras is a conventional method in the art, for non-customized cameras.

Kitagawa et al. disclose a camera system which clearly anticipates all of the apparatus features of the instant camera system, as applied above under 35 U.S.C. 102(b), but Kitagawa et al. do not disclose a method of selling customized versions of their camera using a website, nor do they disclose "leasing" their camera (i.e. "selling" it for a one-time use or other limited use).

However, it would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art, at the time of the invention, to have modified the known method of customized product sales of computers using a website such as dell.com, so as to sell camera systems instead of computer systems, such as the camera system of Kitagawa et al., with the customer selecting particular features in accordance with the known computer sales method, and selling the camera system for a one-time use (i.e. "leased"), as is conventional in the art for non-customized camera systems, so as to increase the profits of a company selling one-time-use cameras by reaching a wider market via the Internet, while satisfying a range of specific market niches by means of customization.

Regarding claims 12-15, storing a customer's photos as digital files and delivering those digital files by means of CD-R, e-mail, or allowing a customer to download the files from a specified Internet location, are all well known, hence, obvious method steps to follow in the art of photographic services. Therefore, it would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art, at the time of the invention, to have further modified the method of sales so as to convert the customer's photos into digital files and deliver those digital files by means of CD-R, e-mail, or allowing a customer to download the files from a specified Internet location, since so doing could be performed by any person of ordinary skill in the art, with neither undue experimentation, nor risk of unexpected results, merely as a matter of design choice, in order to improve sales even further by offering customers even more photo options.

Response to Arguments

8. Applicant's arguments filed July 29, 2002 have been fully considered, but they are not persuasive.

9. Regarding the argument with respect to apparatus claim 17, that Kitagawa et al. fail to disclose providing a service identifier or a service provider account, and further fail to disclose specifying services to be provided by the service provider, the nature and use of the particular data being written into the device is considered merely an intended use. A recitation of the intended use of the claimed invention must result in a structural difference between the claimed invention and the prior art in order to patentably distinguish the claimed invention from the prior art. If the prior art structure is capable of performing the intended use, then it meets the claim. See In re Casey, 152 USPQ 235 (CCPA 1967) and In re Otto, 136 USPQ 458, 459 (CCPA 1963).

In any event, the apparatus of Kitagawa et al. indeed includes the particular claimed usage of providing a service identifier account and services to be provided by the service provider, as the apparatus of Kitagawa et al. pertains to the Advanced Photo System (APS) photography system, which system Kitagawa et al. disclose inherently includes identification numbers of the user and services to be provided, such as the user specifying, for each individual exposure on the roll of film, the desired size and aspect ratio for printing by the service provider. See, in particular, column 1, lines 1-58.

10. In response to applicant's argument with respect to the obviousness rejection, that there is no suggestion to combine the references, the examiner recognizes that obviousness can only be established by combining or modifying the teachings of the prior art to produce the claimed invention where there is some teaching, suggestion, or motivation to do so found either in the references themselves or in the knowledge generally available to one of ordinary skill in the art. See In re Fine, 837 F.2d 1071, 5 USPQ2d 1596 (Fed. Cir. 1988) and In re Jones, 958 F.2d 347, 21 USPQ2d 1941 (Fed. Cir. 1992). In this case, the teaching of Dell is merely for the selling of customized products over the Internet. The selling of non-customized cameras over the Internet is admitted to be conventional, and Kitagawa et al. disclose a customized camera having the same particular features and usage as that of the instant invention. Therefore, the motivation to combine is simply to sell cameras such as that of Kitagawa et al. in the customized online manner of Dell rather than in the conventional online manner.

Conclusion

11. The prior art made of record and not relied upon is considered pertinent to the disclosure.

12. THIS ACTION IS MADE FINAL. Applicant is reminded of the extension of time policy as set forth in 37 CFR 1.136(a).

A shortened statutory period for reply to this final action is set to expire THREE MONTHS from the mailing date of this action. In the event a first reply is filed within TWO MONTHS of the mailing date of this final action and the advisory action is not mailed until after the end of the THREE-MONTH shortened statutory period, then the shortened statutory period will expire on the date the advisory action is mailed, and any extension fee pursuant to 37 CFR 1.136(a) will be calculated from the mailing date of the advisory action. In no event, however, will the statutory period for reply expire later than SIX MONTHS from the mailing date of this final action.
